Not illustrated. 1894 Excerpt: ...Early operations are not only curative measures, but prophylactic methods as well. It is not only the diseased and worse than useless organs and structures the true abdominal surgeon is removing, but he is liberating sound imprisoned organs, the function of which is essential to life. This is not only life-saving work, but a comfort-giving procedure. No true surgeon is clamoring for a thousand or ten thousand laparotomies, but is ever pleading for timely needed work--is ever pleading for the recognition of the necessity for quick surgery in cases where surgery, at some time in the history of the malady, becomes necessary. No one at this time would think of advising a woman to wait until the growth was so large or her physical condition such that she could not walk a mile, before having the tumor removed, as was done a few years ago, by a great writer. This would be dangerous conservatism. It is as absurd to call the removal of a sequestered Fallopian tube and ovary a mutilation, as it is to call an amputation of a hopelessly injured leg a mutilation. These operations are performed to fulfil strictly surgical indications--saving life and relieving suffering. It is a daily occurrence to see reported that a case diagnosed as appendicitis has recovered. That this is true no one will doubt. Many cases reported as recovered have since died from recurrence of the disease, and many an appendix, supposed by the medical attendant to be dangling healthfully in the peritoneum of his patient, is saturated with Mullers fluid or alcohol, in a specimen jar, while the patient has long since died from a perforation, or has been saved by good, timely surgery. No operation in surgery has a higher mortality than that of the delayed
