Not illustrated. 1908 Excerpt: ...pulehra). This genus is distinctive from all other kingfishers in that its members have three toes on each foot instead of four. Of the Reptile-eaters, Western Australia possesses two genera (Dacelo and Halcyon), each having three species. In the former is included the Laughing Jackass of the colonists. The common form, in late spring and in summer, of the Sacred Kingfisher (Halcyon sanctm) is only a visitor to the Southern portions of the State, arriving there in early summer. Psittaci--Parrots. This order embraces the families of the Lories or Brushtongued Parrots (Loriidse), the Cockatoos, and Cockatoo Parrakeets (Cacatuidse), and the Parrots and Parrakeets (Psittacidse). The Parrot family have attained distinction among birds by reason of their comparative high order of intelligence. They also are distinguished by their brilliant and varied plumage, and as comprising the only birds that have the sense of taste defined. They appear to occupy that position in Aves that monkeys do in their class; they also much resemble them in being able to climb with facility, and in this respect the strong-hooked mandibles assist them. Another characteristic of Parrots resembling that of the monkeys is the employment of the toes as an aid to convey the food to the mouth, and holding and separating it during the progress of eating. Most of the members of the family bear captivity well, and whilst in that condition learn readily to imitate man in voice and gesture. Longevity is also another of their characteristics. Western Australia is fairly well represented in all sections of the order. The first-named family, the Lories (Loriidse), are honey-eating birds, and to better enable and assist them in the extraction of food from flowers they are furnished with p...
