

Among Us: Stories of Worship and Faith

Larry Morris opens windows and shows details often missed. Looking at life as God would view it, Morris sees the joy and rejoices in it. Two little girls in the back dancing to the church music? Their free spirits express the love we all aim to give--and wish to receive. A simple touch of the shoulder? It shares care and concern from one in the body of Christ to another. The Baby Jesus jacked from a nativity display? Surely, God must be laughing... and wondering. Well aware of the struggles in life, Morris knows life encompasses so much more, and his poems honor Gods presence in it. A group of young teens, already familiar with hardships--serious illness, the death of a father, divorced parents--are affirming their faith through the Rite of Confirmation. But he knows many others feel lost and reveals one observer during that ritual admitting to having been lost as a youth and now has returned. Among Us: Stories of Worship and Faith celebrates all facets of life, best revealed in the poem, Time for Easter. Just before Easter, a pastor, still mourning the death of his wife a few months previously, paints the church ceiling a sky blue and then adds stars for each deceased congregation member--joy, hope, love, and a bit of play all rolled into one that fully embraces God. You will be caught up in Gods embrace as you read Among Us.
